

On the Children's Day of 2021

1 June 2021

1 June is the Children's Day in the People's Republic of China. While I am no longer a kid by age, it reminds me once again that I have graduated college and am officially an adult who must take up his full responsibility.

I believe it is imperative to dream like a child but act like an adult moving forward. I must stay open-minded, dare to challenge status quo with a child's curiosity, but act as an adult to realize the impossibles and unthinkableables.

I need to take action to follow this principle. Starting today, I will continue to observe this world, raise questions every day, and use my analytical mind to try find answers.

I also believe that self-discipline will become even more important after college because I am now fully in charge of my time until I get a job somewhere in the next few months. I have created a brand-new system for managing my time.

Happy Children's Day to all kids and adults around the world!
